

KI NASSAUER BIO

Ki Nassauer has been dubbed the "Martha Stewart of vintage" in media coverage from varied sources such as the Wall Street Journal, NBC's "Today" and HGTV. She has gained a loyal and engaged audience, with nearly 250,000 followers on social media. Ki has crafted a career from vintage since 1999, scouring flea markets, salvage yards and the occasional street-side pile of castoffs for materials to create inventive furniture and accessories.

One of Ki's joys is connecting with a vast national network of vintage and antiques aficionados—dealers, artisans and people who simply love junk and repurposing. She was able to nurture and broaden that connection in her nine years as editor of Flea Market Style magazine. In 2006, Ki started her vintage shopping extravaganza, Junk Bonanza, held two times a year in Minneapolis. Junk Bonanza showcases wares from hand-picked dealers nationwide.

Now, as creator of Lived-In Style magazine, Ki continues to share her passion for all things old and authentic while chronicling the beauty and utility of the vintage-inspired life.
